INTRODUCTION

The spread of devices that allow the reading of books in digital format, the appearance of new technologies that will enable a more ergonomic reading on screen and enhanced features unthinkable in the analog world, the development, also in Italy, of a digital publishing offer no longer addressed only to an audience of "strong" readers or niches of professionals but also to a wide audience: all these elements introduce us more and more in an era of great transformations in the ways of access to recorded speech, in reading habits and in the dynamics of access to information.

This development will have, in time not easily guessed, a strong impact on libraries services and - as many think - on their role as upholders of memory, access to knowledge and results of scientific research, promoters of reading and lifelong learning, to the point that it's hard to think that they can continue to play in the future the tasks for which they were established, without reinventing deeply its services.

The Digital also creates huge problems on copyright, whose legal system is totally inadequate to ensure a fair balancing of the rights of copyright holders and those of users. The market, both professional-scientific publications and consumer, is oriented to forms of access providing the sale of licenses, not of copies of which the user has the property, thus circumventing the possibility that cultural institutions can benefit from specific exceptions.

Finally, these transformations take place against a backdrop of heavy economic crisis that is accelerating a trend already underway, according to which the State tends to gradually disengage from finance to culture (and beyond), throwing in a heavy crisis the future of libraries and other cultural institutions. This is not an exclusive of Italy, but our Country is more affected because of the historical failures and delays that plague the library sector.

The 57th Congress of AIB wants to take stock of current situation through a reflection that touches the highlights of this scenario.
