INTRODUCTION

Freedom and knowledge are fundamental, non-negotiable rights in any modern democracy. "The World's Most Beautiful Constitution", as Italy's founding document has been called, devotes a number of articles to these rights, assigning to the Italian Republic the task of eliminating whatever economic or social obstacles stand in the way of full participation in the life of the community on the part of all its members. Numerous international and European documents point to the key role of libraries in the achievement of such objectives. However, a closer look at actual conditions and events, at the legal instruments and technological tools for obtaining access to knowledge, including freedom of expression, brings to light a conflicting situation: pervasive control of the means of communication; the rise of private monopolies in the content and services markets; reduced investments, in terms of both funding and political commitment, involving libraries as well as public institutes engaged in educational activities, research and cultural pursuits in general.

In the face of this situation, libraries and their professional associations are reacting, coming up with and supporting innovative strategies for promoting culture, expanding information skills, spreading scientific information and backing the use of documentation from public sources, together with the development of accessible technology. The library can serve as a custodian of future memory, a defender of democracy, a conduit of culture and an arbiter, restoring the balance of the information market. It can be both a niche resource and a community forum. In an age of globalisation and digital convergence, the identity of the library is being reshaped through international contacts and discussions between the leaders and professionals, both old and new, of the "knowledge industry".

The 56th AIB Congress, organised around four plenary sessions, shall focus on the above discussion points, together with a number of case histories. At the conclusion of the Congress, on the evening of November 5th, two seminars will take a further, in-depth look at the topics of reading in infancy and open access to scientific communications, under the respective sponsorship of the "Nati per Leggere" ("Born to Read") association and the AIB-CNUR (National Commission of University and Research Libraries).
